What app does android use to download apps. Does android have a note app. What is app package name in android.

Ken Ratanachai S. answer at 2016-07-05 13 There're two versions of ShareActionProvider, the android framework's and the v7 support library's. In Sunshine you need to support min SDK version 10, while ShareActionProvider was added into the framework from API level 14, so how to provide the feature to SDK 10-13? You use the support library instead. You import the support library in build.gradle here dependencies { ... compile 'com.android.support:appcompat-v7:21.0.2' } Now back to your question about the app namespace. Sunshine is using the attributes that are not available in the framework on the lower SDKs they support (actionProviderClass and showAsAction), so they need to use the custom attributes provided by the support library, and to use the custom attributes you need to use the app namespace. The android namespace is for the framework attributes as the name suggested. Android Studio supports a variety of XML attributes in the tools namespace that enable design-time features (such as which layout to show in a fragment) or compile-time behaviors (such as which shrinking mode to apply to your XML resources). When you build your app, the build tools remove these attributes so there is no effect on your APK size or runtime behavior. To use these attributes, add the tools namespace to the root element of each XML file where you'd like to use them, as shown here: Error handling attributes The following attributes help suppress lint warning messages. Intended for: Any element Used by: Lint This attribute accepts a comma-separated list of lint issue ID's that you'd like the tools to ignore on this element or any of its descendants. For example, you can tell the tools to ignore the MissingTranslation error. All Intended for: Any element Used by: Lint This attribute works the same as the @TargetApi annotation in Java code: it lets you specify the API level (either as an integer or as a code name) that supports this element. This tells the tools that you believe this element (and any children) will be used only on the specified API level or higher. This stops lint from warning you if that element or its attributes are not available on the API level you specify as your minSdkVersion. For example, you might use this because GridLayout is available only on API level 14 and higher, but you know this layout is not used for any lower versions. However, you should instead use GridLayout from the support library. Intended for: Used by: Lint, Android Studio editor This tells the tools what the default language/locale is for the resources in the given element (because the tools otherwise assume English) in order to avoid warnings from the spell checker. The value must be a valid locale qualifier. For example, you can add this to your values/strings.xml file (the default string values) to indicate that the language used for the default strings is Spanish rather than English. When you enable strict mode, you may need to use tools:keep to keep resources that were removed but that you actually want, and use tools:discard to explicitly remove even more resources. For more information, see Shrink your resources. Intended for: Used by: Build tools with resource shrinking When using resource shrinking to remove unused resources, this attribute allows you to specify resources to keep (typically because they are referenced in an indirect way at runtime, such as by passing a dynamically generated resource name to Resources.getIdentifier()). To use, create an XML file in your resources directory (for example, at res/raw/keep.xml) with a tag and specify each resource to keep in the tools:keep attribute as a comma-separated list. You can use the asterisk character as a wild card. For more information, see Shrink your resources.
